Orb Energy opens its new solar factory in Bangalore

Friday, 25th September 2015. Reinforcing its commitment to produce high quality solar systems that are made in India, Orb Energy (“Orb”) today announced the opening of its new solar water heating factory in Bangalore.

The 25,000 square-foot manufacturing plant will produce unique solar water heating systems with a durable ceramic finish to handle hard water conditions often pervasive in India.

Damian Miller, the CEO of Orb, said: "Since inception Orb has aimed to deliver world class products and services to our 80,000 plus customers in India by controlling the design, manufacturing and installation of our unique range of solar systems. This factory will support the scaling of our solar water heater business in India and will bolster our growing export markets too."

Orb is a leading solar energy solutions provider in India. With a total of 150 branches in 8 states of India, and plans to expand to 500 branches in India over the next three years.

K.K.Yadhunath, Vice President – Design and Production said: "We have been able to meet the challenge of producing solar water heating systems that can withstand local water conditions, all at a competitive price. We have done this by investing in our own research and design teams, and setting up manufacturing at scale. Our new facility will be able to make 2,000 solar water heating systems per month to serve this growing market."

Orb's solar water heating systems help residential customers save up to 60% on their electricity bill. It is also ideal for commercial customers, such as hotels, hostels, clinics, hospitals, etc, which can enjoy just one-year pay back on their investment.

Orb is committed to solar water heating technology to help reduce the load on India's electricity grid, and to provide our customers with reliable hot water when they need it.
